Unemployment arises from a variety of causes. One which is always recurring and of the effects of which we have had a recent example is the disorganization of industry resulting from a long war; this is a serious problem admitting of no solution at the best of times. Again there is the unemployment which follows a marked diminution in the quantity of any raw products, such as cotton; fewer hands are required in the mills and factories, we may call this cause bad harvest. Similar, but more serious, is the effect of changes in the industry due to the invention of machinery which does more work and requires fewer workers. And yet another serious cause is a strike or a lockout; and this is the more to be deplored because such a stoppage sometimes is due to a very trivial matter, perhaps the fact that men are working half an hour longer than the regulation of their union permits.
