India is a great country, any Indian can be proud of it. It has an ancient and a rich heritage. The Hindu scripts- the Upanishads, the Bhagavad-Gita, the Vedas and the great epics- the Mahabharata and Ramayana- teach how a man should conduct himself in all situations, at all places and at all times. Indians are spread all over the world and viewed in the right perspective; an Indian has all the traits of a successful individual. But he is not in the limelight internationally. At crucial times, his skill is lacking. Be it in academics, politics, statesmanship or sports. Globally, his identity does not reverberate as that of the European, American, Japanese and Chinese. Economists harp on the lack of competitiveness among the Indian businessmen. There is no distinct "Indian management" which could become a 'benchmark' like that of American/Japanese management. The Indian's deeds do not get highlighted. An Indian is definitely not inferior, but is not among the best.
